

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

In an image processing apparatus, first code data including multiple sets of code data in which image data of multiple static images are compressed and encoded, are synthesized. The first code data are converted into second code data that are compressed and encoded to be a single code data sequence where a motion image aligns the static images in chronological order as consecutive frames. In addition, the second code data may be converted into the first code data.